Journal Snags a Dozen Awards

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill and Thadeus Greenson

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com and thad@northcoastjournal.com

We at the Journal find ourselves with some thanks to pass around. We're gratified on a weekly basis when you pick up our new edition, finding that it adds some value to your lives, and when you come to our website, looking to learn of Humboldt County's latest triumphs and tragedies. We appreciate when you approach us, looking to contribute your stories, photographs, views or letters, looking to be a part of what we do — even when you've got a bone or 10 to pick. And perhaps most of all, we're grateful when you repeatedly entrust us with telling your stories, sending us tips, confiding in us, opening up and sometimes just being willing to answer the phone when we call.

With all that in mind, we were tremendously pleased this week to learn that our colleagues within the California Newspaper Publishers Association had given us a dozen California Journalism Awards. While individually and collectively, we do this for our readers and our community, it's honestly always nice to get a little recognition, a bit of assurance that we are treating our readers and their stories with the care they deserve.

We also want to stress that while these are editorial and graphic design awards, they really represent the hard work of everyone here at the Journal, from the advertising sales reps and administrative staff who keep the ship afloat to the good folks who get the weekly paper on newsstands. This is a group effort every day, and we are humbled and honored to be a part of it.

With that in mind, here's a look at the awards:

First Place Arts and Entertainment Coverage to Journal Arts and Features Editor Jennifer Fumiko Cahill, Calendar Editor Kali Cozyris, a small army of freelancers and the Journal's production staff. This is the fourth time the Journal has taken home top honors for arts and entertainment coverage in the last five years.

First Place Profile Story for Thadeus Greenson's "A Giant Falls Among the Redwoods," a profile of the late John Hudson, a Purple Heart war veteran, caregiver, advocate, community organizer and Sister of Perpetual Indulgence.

First Place Special Section for the June 7 Media Literacy Issue, which featured a variety of news and opinion pieces aimed at helping readers better understand how the Journal — and media in general — operates.

First Place for Special Publication for the summer/fall edition of Humboldt Insider. One judge's take: "Publication is very well done and serving the area with quality writing, useful information and great graphic design and promotions."

Second Place for Coverage of Local Government for assistant editor Kimberly Wear's coverage of Arcata's decision to remove the statue of President William McKinley from the center of the plaza. "Wear brings great voice to this series of stories about the controversy," one judge wrote.

Second Place for Inside Page Layout and Design for Jonathan Webster's layout of "In the Wind," the Journal's Feb. 22 cover story about the prospects of an offshore wind energy farm off the North Coast.

Second Place for Illustration for Jacqueline Langeland's cover illustration for "Plight of the Abalone," the Journal's March 8, 2018, cover story.

Third Place for General Excellence, which judges the entirety of the paper's content, front to back, in two consecutive issues on Feb. 1, 2018, and Feb. 8, 2018.

"This paper is an adventure," one judge wrote. "It's totally engaging and covers the serious to the frivolous ... and is friggin' beautiful, too."

Third Place for Special Section Cover Layout and Design for our March 15, 2018, "The Cannabis Issue," and Nov. 22, 2018, "Gift Guide," cover illustrations by Jonathan Webster and our Sept. 13, "Burger Week 2018," cover illustration by Jacqueline Langeland.

Third Place for Special Publication for the Spring 2018 Humboldt Cannabis Magazine.

Fifth Place for Feature Story for Kimberly Wear's March 8, 2018, story "Plight of the Abalone." One judge described it as, "A gripping tale of an environmental disaster while we are still in the middle of it."

Fifth Place for Front Page Layout and Design for our Feb. 22, 2018, cover illustration for "In the Wind" by Jonathan Webster, our Aug. 23, 2018, cover for "Art in the Streets," designed by Webster with a photo from freelancer Alexander Woodard, and our Oct. 25, 2018, cover for "Catch me if You Can," illustrated by Dave Orchard and designed by Webster. ●

Sequoia Park

Through Shirley's eyes the trees displayed
Their beauty as the children played
And each time that we went anew
She'd ask if once again they grew

Through Shirley's ears they spoke to her
As if her senses merged with theirs
The trees still shelter us from rain
When on this day we came again

The child who learned to climb and slide
Seems tall enough to reach the sky
With carrots for the sheep and lamb
The child now feeds from her own hand

Families pushing kids on swings
While birds, aloft, spread their wings
And groups of children form and greet
It matters not if e'er they meet

These observations she'd confess
In her last years, no worldly stress
But what was just within her sight
The park, the trees, a child's delight

Today I sat and watched this child
Running freely, confident, wild
I thought of Shirley and her awe
And wished for one more day with her.

Community Radio at the Ox?

Editor:

Let us let this whole KHSU debacle come to an end (Mailbox, May 2). Let's let the clueless administrators slink off into uncomfortable retirement. Let's welcome the new administration on board as we take a big, deep breath and try to start all over again. We are all still here. Staff, volunteers, sponsors and listener supporters.

But if it doesn't work out, if KHSU chooses to become Public Radio and not Community Radio, I have an idea. Is anyone else listening to Blue Ox Radio, KKDS, 97.7 on your FM radio dial? Straight out of the Eureka Slough at the corner of First and X streets. Blue Ox Millworks. Eric Hollenbeck's school for kids and adults in wood-working, crafting and life skills. His low-power station could become the new community radio station. Boost it. Support it. Bring in the sponsors and nonprofits. Simply change the station. KKDS. 97.7. Community radio for the North Coast. Hey, Eric?

Roy Marin, Eureka

'Integrity and Strength'

Editor:

On behalf of the Ladies of the CAB and Friends of KHSU, we thank members of the Humboldt State University Academic Senate.

To the following members of the Academic Senate, thank you for your demonstration of integrity and strength of character (NCJ Daily, April 25). The resolution presented and the stand you all have taken demonstrates courage, collaboration and commitment to community.

As we all know what has happened in regards to KHSU is a systemic problem bigger than just the community radio station.

By taking the stand and making the statement, you have put leadership on notice that we stand together for what is the good for all.

Not Trump's Fault

Editor:

Regarding Paul Mann's letter to the editor on the closure of KHSU (Mailbox, May 2), I want to thank you because you helped me win a bet. A friend and I were discussing the closure and I said, "I will bet you that it will only be a matter of time before they blame it on President Donald Trump or his administration." Thank you, again. I have a little bit of news for you: I heard that President Donald Trump cut off the tag on his pillow that says "do not remove under penalty of law." Do you think this could be grounds for impeachment??

Clifford Viale, Eureka

Out of Touch

Editor:

In his April 25 Week in Weed column ("A Match Made in Heaven: The CBD Burger and the Evangelist Editor"), Thadeus Greenson voiced that he felt someone who is an evangelist couldn't be an unbiased reporter on marijuana for the LA Weekly. Well, I feel the same way about the evangelist Franklin Graham, Billy Graham's son and a good friend of Donald Trump's, when he speaks as a supposed political commentator rather than the evangelical spokesperson he is.

Graham says he has a problem with presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg because he campaigns openly as a practicing Episcopalian who also happens to be gay and married to his partner Chasten Glezman. Graham thinks Buttigieg should repent for what he sees as the sin of being gay, and that his religion and sexuality should not be politicized. Graham's opinion may be shared by the mostly conservative evangelicals he represents but I think it would not be so for the general population.

The acceptance of the rights of the LGBTQ community have been steadily on the increase. A national poll from February shows that 68 percent of respondents would be comfortable or enthusiastic about a gay or lesbian candidate while only 54 percent would feel the same about an evangelical.

One need only harken back to Catholic Jack Kennedy or black Barack Obama to find two candidates who managed to overcome what many thought were fatal handicaps. And don't forget, if it weren't for our electoral college system, we would have had our first female president by now.

So I would say to Franklin Graham that he has a right to his own opinion as an evangelical spokesperson but, as a political commentator, most of us would not see Buttigieg's gayness in the condemning Biblical terms he does.

Chancellor Backs Rossbacher's KHSU Cuts

A community group, meanwhile, is organizing to purchase the station

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

California State University Chancellor Timothy White is supporting Humboldt State University President Lisa Rossbacher's recent decision to gut local programming on the KHSU radio station, saying it was in the "fiscal interests of the university."

White's comments came in an April 25 letter responding to Rita Carole, a McKinleyville resident, who had contacted him 10 days earlier to express concerns about Rossbacher's April 11 decision to immediately and indefinitely suspend all of KHSU's volunteer programming and to eliminate all but two of the staff positions dedicated to running the station. The remaining two employees resigned in the ensuing 48 hours, as a host of the station's members and underwriters withdrew their financial support of the station in protest.

Meanwhile, there's a local effort underway to create a local nonprofit organization to purchase the station license.

The university's press release announcing the station's "reorganization" was not signed and did not include a statement from Rossbacher, but the press release pointed to the university's budget crunch, its fiscal support of the station, some operational issues and a desire to involve more students in KHSU's programming as reasons for the decision. White indicated in his letter to Carole that he supported that reasoning.

"The stated goals to be achieved by this realignment — implementing a financially sustainable operating model, preserving quality programming for the North Coast and providing additional opportunities for students — are admirable goals that I support," White wrote. "Attainment of those goals will lead to long-term success for KHSU."

The university has not yet publicly articulated a plan for how it will provide additional opportunities for students at the station or preserve the quality of its programming, but its press release did offer some details about the financial aspect of the decision. The university has cut spending by $9 million over the last two years and is making almost $1 million in additional cuts for the coming 2019-2020 school year. KHSU, meanwhile, was operating at a deficit, needing $135,000 in additional HSU funding in the 2017-2018 school year to balance its books.

KHSU's deficit, according to the university, is the result of increased payroll costs and declining community support, with the release noting that underwriting revenue is down 14 percent this year, with listener support down 17 percent. But KHSU's supporters point out that it was HSU administration's abrupt and controversial firing of popular longtime KHSU program and operations director Katie Whiteside in May of 2018 that sent community financial support for the station into a tailspin.

With White backing Rossbacher's decision to dismantle KHSU as the community knew it, a local group is rapidly working to intervene. Tentatively dubbed "Friends of KHSU-FM," the group of "long time community supporters" of the station wrote a letter to Rossbacher on April 23 informing her that the group is coming up with a proposal to acquire the KHSU license from the university "on mutually beneficial terms" and asking that Rossbacher "maintain an open mind."

The letter states that while the university's decision has been "deeply surprising and upsetting to portions of the community," the group doesn't want to let that obscure its "shared commonalities" with the outgoing HSU president. It then lists those as a recognition that HSU deserves "a great deal of public appreciation" for having nurtured KHSU for more than 50 years, an acknowledgement that the university has said it can no longer afford to financially support the station and a belief that the time has come "for the community to step forward and to shoulder the financial and administrative burden of operating and maintaining the invaluable public service provided by KHSU-FM."

The letter then states that the "Friends group" is working on a proposal to acquire the station license and discuss ways to “allow HSU and its students to remain engaged with the station,” with an aim of presenting the proposal to Rossbacher this month.

“We ask only that you maintain an open mind about this initiative, and that you not take any drastic action which would prejudice the prospects of this potential win-win resolution,” concludes the letter, which was signed by Barbara Boerger, Geraldine Goldberg, Jana Kirk-Levine and Helene Rouvier “on behalf” of the group.

The group got an email response from Rossbacher two days after sending the letter.

“Thanks so much for sending me this information,” the HSU president wrote. “I will absolutely look forward to receiving your proposal with an open mind.”

On May 1, apparently heartened by Rossbacher’s response, Goldberg sent out an email to KHSU supporters seeking donations to help pay for “a Washington-DC based attorney” she hired to negotiate with Rossbacher and the university. The attorney has written a “letter of intent” that was to be sent to Rossbacher in the ensuing days, Goldberg wrote, but the attorney “is not cheap.” Goldberg wrote that the attorney needed $5,000 by May 6 and another $5,000 by “mid-month” to continue his work. (On May 7, Goldberg confirmed to the Journal that the “Friends group” had successfully raised the first $5,000.)

Goldberg wrote that the group is in the process of setting up a bank account to field donations. (At this point, she asks that folks interested in donating email her at geraldine1051@gmail.com so she can get them donation instructions as they become available, or make a contribution online at www.paypal.me/friendofkhsu.)

“I am hoping to raise some money so we can try to save the KHSU that we all love,” she wrote, adding that she feels a sense of urgency due to fears HSU will sell the station license “and if they keep the station, it will likely be unrecognizable to us.”

HSU, meanwhile, sent out a press release on behalf of White’s office May 1 announcing that the search committee convened to find a replacement for the retiring Rossbacher has culled a “sizeable” pool of candidates into a handful of semifinalists.

“From that group, finalists will be interviewed by the full (CSU) board of trustees,” the release states. “We are on schedule to announce the eighth HSU president on May 22, 2019.” ●

Week in Weed

California's Regulated Cannabis Industry in Miniature

Sometimes it takes a village, or maybe just a lounge

By Thadeus Greenson

Southern Humboldt's summer music festivals are breaking new ground this year and will feature designated cannabis areas, where revelers can legally purchase and imbibe to their hearts' content with a seal of approval from the state of California.

Northern Nights Music Festival announced last week that it would be the "first-ever three-day music festival" and the "first ever overnight camping music festival to allow recreational cannabis dispensing and use on-site in the country." We can't speak for the in-the-country claim, but it does appear that the festival — to be held at Cook's Valley Campground along the South Fork of the Eel River on the Humboldt-Mendocino county line July 19 through 21 — will be the first of its kind in the state to feature legal sales and use, which the Legislature approved last year with the passage of Assembly Bill 2020, providing a process for "special event permits" to allow onsite consumption and sales.

The festival — which is akin to a Reggae on the River but for the EDM set — will feature the "Northern Nights Tree Lounge," where folks 21 and up will be able to purchase cannabis from eight to 10 vendors, "including the farmers themselves so festival guests can purchase directly from the source and spark up educational conversations," according to the site. Northern Nights co-founder Andrew Blap told Billboard that the lounge is designed to highlight small cannabis farmers in Humboldt and Mendocino counties.

He said Flow Kana — a San Francisco-based distributor that stakes its brand on getting "sustainable, sungrown" small-batch cannabis to market — is sponsoring the lounge and will do a "farm to bong competition."

"It will take local produce and vegetables and you're going to be able to carve a bong and the winner will get announced each day," Blap told Billboard.

Not to be outdone, Reggae on the River — which, you may recall, is now being produced by High Times Productions Inc. under an agreement with the Mateel

Community Center — also has some big plans for its festival, which will take place a couple weekends after Northern Nights and about a mile north at French's Camp.

As first reported by the Lost Coast Outpost's Ryan Burns, the Humboldt County Planning Commission on May 2 unanimously signed off on a conditional use permit that includes plans for a "cannabis village," a permitted 40,000 square-foot area that will feature more than 120 vendor or exhibitor tents and a designated area to imbibe.

Both the "lounge" and the "village" will be physically separated from areas where alcohol will be sold at the two events, per state law, and Northern Nights even notes that sales of the two mind-altering substances will take place in different counties, as Cook's Valley Campground straddles the county line. (For those keeping score at home, the weed will be sold in Mendocino, the alcohol in Humboldt.)

It will be interesting to see how this goes at the events, both of which had reputations for being cloudy, cannabis-infused free-for-alls long before recreational weed was legalized at the start of last year.

One can imagine them playing out somewhat akin to California's recreational market as whole: Both festivals will have small areas where cannabis will be tightly regulated, taxed and sold to consumers with proper identification at marked-up prices that reflect the state's packaging, testing and tracking requirements. Outside these fenced-in areas, we imagine weed will be plentiful, if possibly contaminated, and sold at rock-bottom prices to anyone who can come up with the cash, regardless of age or ID. And at the end of the day, organizers will lament that regulated sales didn't do as well as projected.

But hey, at least that farm-to-table bong contest sounds like a hit!

‘Courage in the Face of Evil’

On the first anniversary of her death, the Eureka Police Department honored Sharral “Sherry” McDonald May 6 for putting herself between a friend and the armed felon trying to kidnap her.

“Detectives assigned to the investigation noted that Sharral could have easily fled to safety at any time but, instead, became a shield to protect her friend from harm,” EPD Chief Steve Watson read from a letter to McDonald’s family. “The officers and staff at the Eureka Police Department can think of no finer example of an act of courage in the face of evil or of a citizen who is more deserving of the Valor Service Award.”

According to EPD, Ronald Allen Crossland, a 52 year old with a long rap sheet who’d been released from jail just a few weeks earlier, showed up at the H Street home of McDonald’s friend, Jane Doe, his on-again, off-again girlfriend, on May 6, 2018. McDonald and Doe arrived at the residence to find Crossland sitting on the front porch. He followed Doe into the residence and cornered her, brandishing a small-caliber handgun, and threatened to shoot everyone if she did not leave with him.

“Upon witnessing the threats to (Doe’s) life, Sharral immediately and without hesitation walked over to the man, placing herself between him and (Doe),” the letter to the McDonald family reads, adding that Sharral then told Crossland, “You’re being violent and you need to leave.”

Crossland then shot McDonald once in the head and Doe fled to safety. Crossland — who has a history of domestic violence allegations, including several alleged instances with Doe — later committed suicide in a Fortuna trailer park as police closed in.

Eureka Police detective Richard Bise said McDonald — who had no known crisis intervention training or safety gear and was unarmed — essentially told Crossland that if he wanted to get to Jane Doe, he had to come through her first.

“I would like to think I would have that courage,” Bise said.

Watson said the service award has only been given out six times in the five years.

“It’s not an award we give out lightly,” he said.

As Watson spoke, a slideshow with pictures of McDonald was projected onto a screen behind him with images of her holding grandkids, playing softball, decorating Christmas trees and at events large and small throughout her life. At the conclusion of the ceremony, Watson presented the award to McDonald’s children, Shelsey McDonald, Shaun Bagley and Shayla Verbich, and her husband, Philip McDonald, on her behalf.

Shayla Verbich said her mom — remembered as a caretaker by those who knew her, someone who never hesitated to help the people around her — was an amazing woman.

“She is so dearly missed in every day of our lives,” she said.

Placement Denied, Again: In the face of public opposition, Humboldt County Superior Court Judge John Feeney again decided not to approve plans to place a man deemed by the courts to be a sexually violent predator back into the community. This was the third proposed plan for the supervised release of Joshua Cooley and would have seen him staying in a rotating set of Eureka motels, moving every four days. POSTED 05.03.19

Tragedy at McKinleyville High: McKinleyville High School was closed May 3 after a deceased juvenile was found on the school quad around 6:30 a.m. The juvenile was later determined to be a student of the school and the death was deemed an “apparent suicide.” In a letter to parents, Principal Nic Collart offered his thoughts and prayers to friends and family of the students and announced that increased counseling services would be made available. POSTED 05.03.19

Fatal Motorcycle Accident: Dylan Lafranchi, a 26-year-old Blue Lake man, died May 1 in a motorcycle crash shortly after law enforcement called off a high-speed pursuit that began when officers attempted to pull him over for speeding — reaching speeds in excess of 100 mph — on State Route 299. Due to the high speeds and a potential danger to the public, officers stopped the pursuit on Blue Lake Boulevard but the crash occurred about a half mile down the road. POSTED 05.01.19

Yeah, it's Best of Humboldt — only the biggest event of the whole year. It's not just a popularity contest, you know. Whoever we crown "Best of Humboldt," like, represents us. The people, places and things that win should totally go above and beyond to make Humboldt County an amazing place. So, who would you crown? 'Cuz the prom committee at the North Coast Journal is taking nominations. Oh, and there's gonna be a super fun party, so you should start planning your outfit now.

ROUND 1: May 1 – May 28. Nominate your favorite person, place or business in each category.

ROUND 2: June 1 - June 30. We count the vote and find the top three nominees. Then, you vote for your favorite.

In order to participate, you'll have to make an account and confirm your email address. But we pinky-swear it's quick and easy. Once your account is up and running, you can nominate and vote once a day. Vote for as many or as few categories as you want. And FYI, we take Best of Humboldt, like, super seriously. NCJ has installed bots to monitor voting. We will totally remove wrongful nominations and votes. There's a lot at stake here, so can you just not?

The Graduates

HSU art department graduates at the Reese Bullen Gallery

By Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

The annual year-end exhibition of works by Humboldt State University art majors is up at the HSU Reese Bullen Gallery. Curated by the members of the museum and gallery practice class under the direction of Ian Carey, Britt Sheldon and Gabriella Reisz, the show features artworks by graduating seniors in media including jewelry, drawing, painting and photography.

A fun handmade necklace designed by Courtney Junette, described as a "trip-tych" as though it were a painting, features a hand-forged chain made from interlocking units like wobbly paper clips supporting three iridescent placards that look like tiny solar panels for around-the-neck wear.

The painting "Sylvia," by Amanda Feathers surrounds a likeness of American poet Sylvia Plath with fern fronds and a pastel mandala. The Plath portrait is painted in a way that honors its photographic source: Contrast is heightened, color desaturated. The mandala and portrait are painted flatly in sepia and calamine pink, while the poet's smock, executed in a painterly array of mauves and blues, attains unexpected dimensionality.

Pairing traditionally religious devotional iconography with a photographically based pop subject is something I associate locally with exuberant portraits of pop icons by HSU painting professor Gina Tuzzi — but in this painting the celebrity canon takes a literary turn, with Plath standing in lieu of Prince. While it's nice to see a poet who died in 1963 getting the full mandala treatment, poets, unlike pop stars, are not usually (ever?) instantly recognizable figures for members of the general public. How the viewing experience might have been different for a viewer who failed to make the connection between the Sylvia of the title, the sepia figure flatly painted to mimic the photographic effect of blown-out contrast, and the larger-than-life author of poems like "Lady Lazarus" and "Daddy" remained unclear.

A painting by Naomi Rose Doherty titled "Red Scare: The U.S. Involvement in the 1965 Indonesian Genocide," is structured in three overlapping layers, each of which manifests a different paint handling approach. The base layer is a screen of loosely painted flowers repeated in grid formation, imitating wallpaper. In the lower half of the canvas, the wallpaper flowers start to bleed and run. Hovering in the middle of this are two small, ragged children standing in a heap of dirt or rubbish, painted in sepia so they look like figments of the photographic past. In the foreground, the dainty, hard-edged figure of a different child dressed in the elaborate regalia of a traditional Indonesian dancer sways into view. This young girl cuts her eyes cut to one side in the general direction of the ragged children-icons while she rattles her fan, even though, given their positioning, such a gesture should be meaningless. It's as if she is somehow aware of their existence there in the painting's middle distance. While this layering approach to composition has come in for widespread use in the age of Photoshop, the use of layers to evoke the experience of a dislocated past defined by violent geopolitics specifically recalls the work of Vietnamese American painter Dinh Q. Le.

The photograph "Ditch" by Elijah Howe, more vested in the here-and-now, brings together nine different exposures of culvert pipes to make a composite rendering in detail-laden black and white. Multiple focal points allow viewers to fixate on individual details of this grimy subject. Against all likelihood, some of those details start to seem obscurely significant. For instance, the way the lip of one galvanized pipe projecting from the concrete wall wavers, while another is flush with the concrete surrounding it. The abandoned pair of battered shoes in the foreground of the photomontage seem like placeholders for the photographer. Perhaps paradoxically, in this exhibition it's photographs and photographers — more so than other media specialists — who grapple most directly with the stuff of the material world.●

The 2019 art department graduates' exhibition will be up at the Reese Bullen Gallery through May 18. The gallery is located inside the HSU art building at the intersection of B Street and Laurel.

Ice Cream Every Day

Churning it out at Living the Dream

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

If you're strolling Eureka's boardwalk around 8:30 a.m., the sea air might be tinged with the sweet, buttery smell of snickerdoodles baking in the countertop oven at Living the Dream Ice Cream (1 F St.). And if you cup your hands against the glass doors to see past the glare of the morning sun, you might see Shawn Powers in the glass booth in the back — possibly singing and dancing to music — making ice cream.

The booth is just big enough to hold the ice cream machine, the mini fridge-sized blast freezer on top of it, a pair of stainless steel sinks and one person pivoting between them. He and his wife, Dena Powers, started the business six years ago, churning out organic ice cream and gelato in constantly changing flavors from balsamic fig to Turkish delight. At first, they shared all the duties but these days Dena handles the payroll and bookkeeping, as well as working up front here and there, while Shawn keeps the 23 tubs in the display case full.

The shop is aptly named, given that the couple had been daydreaming about running an ice cream place since they met in college in New Mexico, where they frequented a car-hop style frozen custard joint. Dena, who'd worked in an ice cream shop in high school, even worked up a business plan for one as a class assignment while earning her business degree. The pair came close to buying the storied, century-old Bon Boniere in Old Town, with Shawn working as a sort of apprentice and learning to make its signature ice cream for months before the deal fell through. "I loved their ice cream," he says with a sigh. "We literally cried over it."

According to Shawn, it was Dena who actually made each piece of their plan for Living the Dream happen. She laughs when asked about it but nods. She worked as an accountant at a local firm for a few years before opening the shop and also skated with Humboldt Roller Derby as Lush D. Lux. "You meet so many strong women there," she says, "and that probably gave me the courage to do this." She adds that, like the risk of opening a business, derby is "all about getting out of your comfort zone."

Handling the machinery and accompanying tinkering is right in Shawn's comfort zone. "I was pretty confident in my gear because that's my thing," says Shawn, who served in the Navy for nine years, working on gas turbine engines and ship propulsion electronics. "I clean my machine before every batch, I'll rinse and sanitize it. And if I let it sit for more than 15 minutes, I break it down and clean it." It's a hassle he says pays off when he sees the dairy inspector standing in line for ice cream.

The bright Japanese carp and goldfish tattooed on Shawn's forearms twist as he pours a glug of vanilla extract into the machine, then carefully empties a container of cinnamon into the opening, tapping it against the metal edge. He peers into down into the turning blades to see the level and consistency of the pale mixture. He says they started with countless home and industrial recipe books, measuring and timing according to the instructions from the likes of Ben and Jerry's and Humphry Slocombe. But now he wings it, reaching to the shelf over head for ingredients — jars, bags and bottles of nuts, pink peppercorns, Thai tea and tajín, boxes and sacks of Guittard cocoa, chocolate chips and syrup — eyeballing the amounts as he goes. After the machine has hummed for a minute, he samples a shot's worth in an orange mug, smacks his lips and adds more cinnamon.

Once it's mixed completely and churned into soft serve consistency at about 30 degrees, he'll pour it into tubs to be placed in the mini blast freezer. "You can put food hot from the oven in there and it'll be a rock in an hour," says Shawn.

Shawn Powers whips up a batch of cinnamon ice cream.

"It's like the microwave of freezers." That speed is crucial — the faster the soft ice cream freezes, the smaller the ice crystals will be and the smoother the final product. Once the batch is cooled to about minus 12 degrees, it joins the stacks of tubs in one of two industrial freezers and will likely make its way into the case by afternoon, to be served at a fat-enhancing gelato temperature of 6 degrees. Depending on what needs restocking, he'll turn out six to eight flavors a day, each batch taking between 30 minutes to an hour.

The basics are always on hand: cookies galore, mint chip, sweet cream and some variety of coffee, chocolate and vanilla. The skyrocketing price of vanilla has made it less profitable but the Powerses know better than to substitute or skip favorites. "People get really emotional," Shawn says. "I had a lady chew my ass out on the phone because I didn't have mango habanero."

Typically there are four non-dairy options between the sorbets and gelatos made from coconut milk, the high fat content of which makes for a creamier finish. Local candymaker Hum Yum even provides a milk-free caramel for flavoring.

"Having access to stuff like that around here really kicks up the quality ... If you don't, people will call you on it," says Shawn. The bacon maple bourbon ice cream, for example, gets Humboldt

Smokehouse bacon and Bulleit bourbon, both of which cost more but yield the texture and flavor he's after. They also stick to organic ingredients, from the bubbly in the strawberry Champagne sorbet to the cones and the spirulina that colors the mint chip ice cream. Though nothing, so far, can replace crumbled Oreos. From the outset, he says they figured, "We'll try to use the absolute best and we'll just have to make the numbers work."

The organic ice cream base itself, from Straus Family Creamery, is some high-end stuff, coming in at a luxurious 14 percent fat content, justifying the splurge. Some of the fat is from egg yolks, which eliminates the need for emulsifiers for texture (again smoothing out those ice crystals) and technically makes the ice cream frozen custard. Shawn says it makes a decadent coffee creamer and he can't be wrong — a sip is like tasting primordial ice cream, somewhere between sweetened clotted cream and the sweet, pale yellow filling of a cream puff.

"We experiment constantly," says Shawn, adding, "I get flavors from cocktail menus, I steal shamelessly from Voodoo Donuts, whatever." All he needs is the concept or even a name and he'll figure it out. The suggestion board helps him remember things he hasn't made in a while or reach beyond his and Dena's personal palates for new ideas. "I get weird suggestions all the time. Some of them sound nasty and some aren't feasible, but I'll look at them all," he says. "We even made crab ice cream for the festival — it's not my thing but we sold out." (For the curious, it was a lemon and butter base with a little crab blended in at the end.) Still, the weirdest tasting request was a Sriracha ice cream for Wing Fest a couple of years ago that Shawn says had a "really strong vomit flavor to me," but, like the crab, sold out.

The only flavors you won't ever see are bright blue bubble gum and cotton candy — Shawn just doesn't like "the idea of the hardcore artificial flavors." Ice cream, he notes, is a small indulgence for most people and he and Dena want to make it right. Their kids aren't quite as picky.

"My kids will eat ice cream anywhere," he says. "They don't care. They're traitors," says Shawn. "But I will, too." ●

The Fantastic Mr. Fox

The best writers of children's books tend to come from rather curious backgrounds and Roald Dahl had that part of the CV down pat. A global traveler from childhood, through his life he crossed paths with royalty, movie stars and even 007 creator Ian Fleming. He wrote poetry, prose and screenplays all those years, but is best remembered for such children's books as James and the Giant Peach and Matilda.

All his stories had a macabre touch amid their brilliance but they're also oh-so very English, especially seen in context with fellow Brit J.K. Rowling's contributions to the genre. The Fantastic Mr. Fox is a story with perhaps fewer of those famed elements but still a fine one, and Humboldt State University's department of theater, film and dance takes it on for its final show of the season.

The production is engagingly staged as a family-friendly one, while still doing the spirit of the often cranky Mr. Dahl right proud. Staged with a minimum of anthropomorphic makeup and masks, the tale is narrated by Badger (Jeremy Stolp). He spins the story of Mr. Fox (Taiquira Williams), who lives in a burrow with Mrs. Fox and their two children, and by night raids the livestock of local farmers Boggis, Bunce and Bean to feed his family. The farmers, played with blustery gusto by Garrett Vallejo, Camille Borrowdale and Victor Daniel Parra and outfitted in colorful finery, have had enough of these nightly incursions, and set out to go after the family of foxes.

They first hunt Mr. Fox with a shotgun but fail with great effect before turning to shovel, and then backhoe, to the chagrin of their human neighbors. This leads the panicked but determined family of foxes to dig and tunnel farther into the earth, where they meet up with Badger and all their various burrowing neighbors, who look to Mr. Fox for a plan to keep their families from starving.

The artistic staff for director Troy Matthew Lescher's play has done a bang-up job in masks, costuming and set design (especially in the brief appearance of a giant puppet of a cranky housekeeper that rather defies description), and in such touches of the rotating centerpiece of an onstage set and having extras spend much of the play among the audience. I couldn't say for sure if Dahl would be proud — he seems like the type to hurl a scone at you for presuming what he might think — but perhaps he'd like younger audiences having a good time while their parents rethink leaving out poison for the gophers in the yard.

The Humboldt State University's production of The Fantastic Mr. Fox plays at the Gist Hall Theatre this Friday and Saturday May 9-10 at 7 p.m. with a matinee Sunday, May 12 at 2 p.m. For more information, call 826-3928 or visit www.humboldt.edu/theatre.

Mamma Mia!

If you're unfamiliar with the plot of the stage and screen hit playing at Ferndale Repertory Theatre, here's a rundown: At 20, Sophie (Alyssa Plante) is getting married — much to the chagrin of her free-thinking, independent, tie-dye wearing mother, Donna (Ruthi Engelke). There's just one thing missing: her father. After reading her mother's diary, Sophie realizes that she isn't the product of a sperm donor, as her mother has told her for years, but the love child of one of three men (Jorey McComas, John W. Schutt Jr. and Jonathan Moreno). Donna isn't sure which one so, without her mother's knowledge, Sophie invites the three potential baby daddies to her wedding, thinking she'll know her bio dad on sight. Music, fun and hilarity ensue, all propelled by ABBA's greatest hits.

There is never a dull moment in Ferndale Repertory Theatre's Mamma Mia! It's a fast-paced musical packed with talent. Songbird Plante's sweet soprano carried each melody effortlessly. Engelke, clearly a seasoned actress, brought depth and humor to Donna. Though not everyone onstage has the vocal chops to perfectly execute every ABBA song (who does, really?), the acting made up for it. There were some hidden gems in the supporting cast. Nolan Sanchez, who played Sophie's fiancé Sky, was truly endearing and I found myself wishing he had more center-stage time. Kyle Sanderson as Pepper and Molly Severdia as Tanya (the best voice in the house, in my opinion) were effortlessly funny in their brief but memorable frat boy/cougar romance. As the three dads — McComas as Sam, Schutt as Bill and Moreno as Headbanger Harry — all brought to the stage totally distinct, fleshed out characters that made you understand how Donna could fall a little in love with each of them more than 20 years ago.

Tons of fully choreographed ensemble numbers made Mamma Mia! visually exciting, with plenty to see and tap your toes to throughout the musical. The ensemble also lent multi-part harmonies to each song, rounding out ABBA's "Dancing Queen," "Lay All Your Love on Me" and "Voulez Vous" in a way that did the famous disco numbers justice. The minimal set design allowed each scene to move fluidly into the next and creative direction by Molly Severdia (especially in the freaky and fun dream scene "Under Attack") made the most of a relatively small production. And my mom really liked it.

Spoiler: At the end of the musical, cast members stream into the audience, inviting viewers to dance and sing along to a few of ABBA's best, so you get the chance to be a Dancing Queen, too.

Meltdown Fest

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

It's been a bad week, to be honest. My news-addicted mind experienced a mild apoplexy at two items I can't help but treat as related. The United Nations has released a stunning report that humans — and more specifically our exploitative world economic engines — are accelerating the extinction of some million-plus species of plants and animals. Also, Joe Biden has thrown his hat into the ring as the democratic establishment hopeful. I don't have the space here to explain why I find his record dreadful but I will say that the unwillingness of the Obama administration to prosecute Wall Street or the banks for their many crimes against humanity and nature are major components of the Black Mass that has summoned the demons who are currently running our country. Responsibility and consequences seem to have only a downward market trajectory, and the resting place for all of that damage — below even the ravaged global poor — is the natural world. We can't afford to just go about business as usual because business as usual is killing everything. We must have progress.

I took a day off to go see some music and check out the natural world. There are trilliums blooming everywhere, even within walking distance of my house. That's good. And there are a lot of great shows coming up this week, which also helps. But I still had to vent a little to avoid total meltdown. It's healthy, I suggest you all try it.

Have a great week.

Thursday

Arkansas native Kendl Winter set up shop in Olympia, Washington, soon after graduating high school and quickly established herself as an indie folk powerhouse. After releasing three albums with K Records, she teamed up with fellow banjoist Palmer T. Lee to form The Lowest Pair. When the duo came to the Sanctuary last August, I made a childish joke about their chosen stage name and for that I make no apologies. However, despite my general aversion to all things banjo, I have found their music to be quite beautiful. See for yourself at the Sanctuary tonight at 8 p.m. You won't regret it. (Sliding scale $10-$25).

Friday

Portland singer-songwriter Luz Elena Mendoza fronts the band Y La Bamba, a dreamy crossover act that nestles somewhere between the sounds of Sergio Mendes and Destroyer. You can catch the group at Humbrews tonight at 9:30 p.m.

($15, $12 advance), on tour in support of its latest release Mujeres, which is somehow as good as 2016's phenomenal Ojos Del Sol.

Los Angeles' own rockabilly/punk trio The Rocketz are in the house tonight. What house is that? Why, the Alibi, of course, specifically in the dark half of the establishment. The music kicks off at 11 p.m. Dead Drift opens the night up and the door price is a mere $7 for all you rockers and rockettes.

Saturday

Well, this looks wholesome and exciting: Blue Dragon Steel Band is a steel drum ensemble featuring local elementary and middle school students. The group, which celebrates its decade-run on the local chromatic metal scene this year, gets together for a concert tonight at 6 p.m. at The Arcata Playhouse. ($10). The Arcata High Steel Band — friendly rivals perhaps? — opens the show.

Later at 7 p.m. just down the road, you can find a very different kind of all-ages show when San Diego's hardcore band Therapy, returning to town to rock the rubber floors of the Outer Space. Local support comes from Unholy Orifice and Husky and the Slow Attack ($7).

Sunday (Mother's Day)

Westhaven Center for the Arts presents its 17th annual Spring Fling Fundraiser today at 1 p.m. This free, family-friendly event features a silent auction, face painting and a spring-themed raffle, as well as music by the Compost Mountain Boys and Rosalind Parducci from No Pardon. I don't really know what people are supposed to do on Mother's Day — I suppose it's really up to her — but this seems like it could be a nice afternoon prelude to a larger celebration for some lucky mothers.

Monday

It's pretty quiet out here today. However, I would like to offer my regards to our beloved local Portuguese community, as today is the feast of Our Lady of Fatima. So, as I have often heard it said on more than a few beautiful Humboldt mornings, bom dia.

Tuesday

Los Angeles' Pedestrian Deposit heads

The Lowest Pair plays the Sanctuary on Thursday, May 9 at 8 p.m. Courtesy of the artists up a showcase full of otherwise local noise-mongers tonight at Siren's Song at 9 p.m. ($7). Join Rio Dell's grind-meisters Car Made of Glass, Ferndale's noise act Goruta (I didn't know it was legal to make loud sounds in Ferndale) and Arcata's spicy duo Arugula for an evening of crashing sounds and static set to various volumes and tempos. I'll be there.

Word Humboldt presents its Bigfoot Poetry Slam at Northtown Coffee today at 6 p.m. This free event is a contest to determine who will be the four poets sent to represent at the Bigfoot Regional Slam in Portland, Oregon, this summer. There will be two rounds, contestants must use their original work and are asked to keep the performances at three minutes max. There will be an open mic at the beginning if you feel like contributing some non-competitive material to the general vibe.

Wednesday

I suggest you go to the Siren's Song tonight at 8 p.m., where you will be treated to the heavy sounds of San Francisco's Crystal Logic, Oakland's Doctor Deaf, Shively's Blackplate and Eureka rockers The Tweeners. Can't go wrong there ($6). ●

The good folks at Westhaven Center for the Arts present their annual Spring Fling Fundraiser Sunday, May 12 from 1-4 p.m. (free entry). It's an afternoon of good eats, great music and camaraderie featuring the Compost Mountain Boys and Rosalind Parducci. Plus, a raffle, auction, kids' activities and more.

Put your sampling pants on and grab your ticket book for A Taste of Main Street, happening Thursday, May 9 from 5-8 p.m. in Old Town/Down-town Eureka ($25). Stroll with friends and foodies through town enjoying nibbles and noshes from businesses and producers at hosting venues. Enjoy live music, as well, and the free shuttle service.

Keep cool as an Ice Cube while watching Dumb Movies with Smart People: Anaconda. Saturday, May 11 at 1 p.m. at Humboldt County Library (free). Keeping Tradition

What better way to welcome spring than to surround yourself with lively, colorful, creative people and see what's new (and old) down at Blue Ox Historic Village? The 2019 May Day Artisan Faire is back Saturday and Sunday, May 11 and 12 from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. ($12, $8 ages 9-15, free for ages 8 and under). The event is a wonderful opportunity to see what happens at the historic park and millworks. Visitors can harken back to a simpler time when "keeping up with the Smiths" meant those of the copper, black, gold variety.

While there, see blacksmithing, pottery, fiber arts, wood-working and other demos in action. Learn a thing or two from masters of their trade. Carry on the tradition by signing up for a workshop or two. Feel folksy with tunes by Dale Winget, Evan Morden and Seabury Gould, and the Rinky Dink String Band on Saturday and on Sunday, hear what's good with Jaimie Fullmer, Icarus and Sons and Mojave Green. Eat up, drink up and even take a twirl around the May Pole. The May Day Artisan Faire is a blast for the whole family, so bring the littles, and treat mom to some old-fashioned fun for her special day. Storytellers, local food (Sammy's BBQ) and libations, a kids' zone, puppet shows and more round out the day.

What's your jam? New Orleans jazz? Blues? Western swing? Zydeco? Wherever you go, all over town this weekend you'll find joints jumping with every type of danceable, toe-tappable, can't-sit-still-if-you-try music. The Redwood Coast Music Festival is back to rockabilly Eureka from May 9-12 with seven venues, 40 bands, 200 musicians from all over the country, and more than 100 sets of live music. Swing out, sister.

The festival, now in its 28th year, sees the very best performers in multiple genres of music turning up the heat in our cool coastal town. It's four days of music, dance, retro styles and good times. The party gets started after Taste of Main Street with the RCMF Kick-Off Dance at the Adorni Center at 7:30 p.m. featuring The Hot Baked Goods with Clint Baker, playing jazz tunes from the '20s and '30s ($15 without all-event pass).

Special RCMF events this year include the Redwood Coast Blues shows with Wee Willie Walker and The Anthony Paule Soul Orchestra, Rick Estrin & the Nightcats, Charlie Baty, Curtis Salgado and Alan Hager and more. Pappy & Junior's Western Swing All Stars featuring Hot Club of Cowtown fiddle player and vocalist Elana James and a host of others will have you dancing and clapping. Cajun favorites Tom Rigney and Flambeau are back to hoot and holler as are Gino and the Lone Gunmen, Gator Nation and Stompy Jones, plus a healthy smattering of local bands, dancers and performers. The all-event pass runs you $115 (less than $30 a day with music all day/night), or you can purchase 1-day tickets, tickets for individual shows or take advantage of several free events. Go to www.rcmfest.org for complete schedule and ticket info or call 445-3378.

She Should Run

Long Shot and Netflix's Ted Bundy biopic

By John J. Bennett

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

Reviews

LONG SHOT. My wife has harbored a celebrity crush on Seth Rogen since long before he started showing up in good suits; this confounds and troubles me. But to each her own. We can at least agree that Rogen is a writer and performer of substantial comedic gifts. For my part, well, I have been embroiled in a complex and, in the world of actual reality, nonexistent relationship with Charlize Theron for longer than I care to admit, and have been especially gratified by her recent career moves, whereby she more often than not garners a producer's credit and appears as a goofball, a Valkyrie or some otherwise impossible combination thereof.

And so a pairing of the two would of course become an occasion for a movie date. And this one, it should be emphasized, will be gratifying to even those among us who are not superfan weirdos.

Fred Flarsky (Rogen), a semi-gonzo investigative journalist with a Brooklyn-based independent newspaper, resigns in protest when said paper is subsumed by the media empire of pustulant schemer Parker Wembley (Andy Serkis). (This after executing a near-perfect pratfall escaping a Nazi rally where he has been undercover.) Fred is sad and without prospects. Fortunately, he has well-heeled best friend Lance (O'Shea Jackson Jr.) and a pact whereby each must make a dedicated effort to cheer the other, should some existential misfortune befall him. Lance clears his schedule, gives his staff the day off and focuses on taking Fred's mind off his worries. His plan entails, as it should, cans of LeCroix refilled with Johnnie Walker Blue and CBD oil, a day at the park and attendance of a World Wildlife Fund gala featuring a performance by Boyz II Men.

While at the concert, Fred crosses paths with Charlotte Field (Theron), his once-upon-a-time babysitter, hero and crush, now Secretary of State under bumbling President Chambers (Bob Odenkirk). After watching Fred unload on Parker Wembley, who has been odiously pursuing her (while not busy dismantling independent news media), and fall spectacularly down the stairs, Charlotte can't stop thinking about him. In need of a punch-up speech-writer to defray her perceived humorlessness, she hires Fred to join her and her aides-de-camp Maggie (June Diane Raphael) and Tom (Ravi Patel) on a world tour to drum up support for her new environmental initiative and a run for the White House. They forge an unlikely bond on the campaign trail, alternately squabbling over the vagaries of international politics and reminiscing about their shared past. Before it even gets on its feet, the relationship is contentious: Maggie finds Fred an inappropriate, unformed companion for a woman of Charlotte's prominence and stature; the Secretary's global climate protection plan is winnowed down by the prevailing winds of backroom exigency; Fred is aghast that Charlotte would allow her vision to be compromised. Naiveté and human relationships are cast against the cruelties of big business and politics. Usually there's a clear winner in that particular match-up but Long Shot, for all its canny satire and outright takedowns of chauvinism, has some hope in it, too.

Directed by Jonathan Levine, who has made a few real gems before this (50/50 in 2011, The Night Before in 2015, both starring Rogen), Long Shot accomplishes that ever-rarer of feats: managing to be hilarious, heartfelt and yet still significant and topical. Because it starts with comedy and with emotional authenticity — which I credit largely to a screenplay co-written by Dan Sterling and Liz Hannah, whose script for The Post (2017) was a knockout and, like this one, an awesome feminist broadside — the movie is warm and inviting before it starts drilling down into the real stuff of an unlikely relationship in the public eye, much less the constant warfare of being a woman in a position of power. The whole thing is remarkably nuanced, funny, sexy, heartwarming and thoughtful in a way that romantic comedies just aren't — maybe haven't ever been. Theron and Rogen have real chemistry, and both go into some vulnerable, admirable places with their performances (perhaps more surprising on the part of Rogen than Theron). Long Shot is an unexpectedly accomplished and also deeply entertaining example of how a classic formula — even as a big mainstream movie — can, with some care and intelligence, transcend its supposed limitations. EXTREMELY WICKED, SHOCKINGLY EVIL AND VILE. Academy Award-winning documentarian Joe Berlinger directs an adaptation of Elizabeth Kendall's memoir about her years in a relationship with Ted Bundy, during which he was arrested and tried for the murders of a great many young women. Zac Efron plays Bundy in an immersive, almost uncomfortably comfortable performance. Lily Collins, as Kendall, becomes an almost diaphanous inhabitant of a vodka bottle as the events move along.

I don't share the morbid fixation some have on American serial killers but I get it. Extremely subverts that fascination in an interesting way, presenting the events from inside the relationship, casting Bundy primarily as Kendall perceived him. It's an interesting perspective and the movie is executed well enough to be troubling (forgoing horror-violence, except in some crime scene photographs), but somehow left me wanting something more terrifying. The Mink Mystery

I dumped my old imaginary friend. My new one is a woman. She's great. You'll meet her in a sec.

She helped me solve the greatest mystery of my local beachcombing career — seven skulls of the American mink (Neovison vison) washed up together.

(To that one dude reading this who knows the answer: Shut up for once and don't ruin this for everyone else, OK?)

My rational examination of this mystery began with the fact that the ocean sorts stuff. For example, experienced agate hunters know to first look in the upper chunky parts of a gravel bed rather than where all the skipping stones are.

Natural sorting occurs due to the size, shape and density of different objects. Where and when these things wash up depends on currents, wind, surf, tide and the shape of the coastline.

Ocean sorting is like the shaking and swirling of a gold pan. The dense gold settles together. Sometimes sorting on the beach is very specific, too. I've seen aggregations of molted crab legs in one spot and a mass of their back shells nearby. So when beachcombing, if you find a cool thing, look for more.

The one glass fishing float I found was near several old bottles — including a large Coke bottle with “litre” spelled the European way. I believe these items all washed out of the dunes after a period of high surf and erosion, which is another version of sorting.

Another example of ocean sorting is the Great Pacific Garbage Patch, which is an area of concentrated floating plastic debris formed by rotating currents that draw the trash toward the middle. Most plastic bottles I find washed up locally are apparently of local origin. But occasionally I find a bunch of bottles with Chinese, Japanese and Korean writing on them washed up together. These bottles probably got into the ocean in different locations but were drawn together and tossed up.

But there's no way the ocean could separate mink skulls from other small mammal skulls, right? Other local small mammals include skunks, gophers, raccoons, possums, gray foxes, bobcats and otters. Added all together, these animals are far more common than mink. So, if dead mammals are routinely washing out to sea, I'd expect to find at least five other species for every mink.

The seven mink skulls washed up on a low tide during a large, long period storm swell. They were among pieces of water-logged wood, worn aluminum cans, crab parts, dead seastars and one marine mammal vertebra. So I think this stuff had been sitting in a spot below the normal scour depth of the surf and all came up together when the currents finally moved everything with a susceptible size and density.

But none of this explains the mink bias. Luckily, when rational examination fails, I can always turn to my imaginary friend. I found her at sea in her awesome boat, catching big fish with all her girlfriends in bikinis — just like on all my favorite webcasts. While she was gaffing a halibut she explained that wild minks were protesting in solidarity with fur-farm minks. Sympathetic wild minks, she said, were hunger striking, self-immolating and throwing themselves into the sea.

She even posted a video on my YouTube channel to “honor the heroic minks.” The first comment on the video was, “Hey numbnuts, mink carcasses are used for crab bait.”

Indeed, the internet says mink carcasses make good Dungeness crab bait and are available for as little as $1 each from mink farms. But maybe you can solve this mystery: Do the bags of bait minks come labeled “not for human consumption” like frozen anchovies? ●
